Recipe Test & Cost Update

What this sample shows: a follow-up conversation where earlier estimates begin to be replaced by actual test information, while several decisions remain provisional. The conversation is intentionally left conversational so the later consolidation can demonstrate how repeated, changed, and unresolved information is organized.

User

I finally made the three test sauces.

AI

Good. Did you record what went into each one?

User

Mostly. Mild Green was easy. Smoky Red needs work. Hot is actually hot, maybe too hot.

AI

So none of the recipes should be treated as final yet?

User

Correct. Mild Green is closest.

AI

Did you calculate costs?

User

Sort of. I spent $31.84 on ingredients, but some of that is left over.

AI

Then $31.84 is purchase cost, not the cost of the test batch.

User

Right. I need to figure out how much I actually used.

AI

Did you buy bottles?

User

Yes. Remember I guessed around a dollar each?

AI

Yes, but we marked that unverified.

User

Actual was $18.60 for 24 bottles before tax.

AI

That is about $0.78 per bottle before tax, assuming all 24 are usable.

User

Fine, but don't turn that into final product cost yet.

AI

Agreed.

User

I only filled four bottles of each flavor this time because these are recipe tests, not the market batch.

AI

So 12 test bottles total.

User

Yes.

AI

Earlier the working market batch was six bottles of each flavor.

User

Keep that for now. Eighteen total for the actual first sales test.

AI

Any packaging issues?

User

The labels I printed at home looked terrible once they were on the bottles.

AI

Temporary labels only?

User

Definitely.

AI

Did you contact Jen?

User

Yes. She said send her the bottle dimensions and whatever legally has to go on the label.

AI

So design is waiting on both measurements and labeling requirements.

User

Exactly.

AI

Anything else change?

User

The $2 ingredient-cost guess may actually be high, but don't replace it until I do the math correctly.

AI

Understood. Keep it as an old provisional estimate until actual unit cost is calculated.

User

Also Smoky Red needs another test. It tasted too much like barbecue sauce.

AI

Action item: revise and retest Smoky Red.

User

Mild Green might need a little more acid too.

AI

Is that a final change?

User

No. Just a test note.

AI

Got it.
